The Banque de France (BdF) and the European University Institute (EUI) are organizing their yearly joint conference that will take place in Paris on November 28, 2025. The conference will have Federica Romei (University of Oxford and CEPR) as a keynote speaker. It will cover a variety of themes related to the new directions in academic research and their policy implications. These topics include (but are not limited to):

- The Impact of Tariffs on Global Trade and Growth
- Monetary Policy in a Fragmenting Global Economy
- The Future of US Dollar Dominance: Challenges and Opportunities
- Geopolitical Risks and Their Impact on International Finance
- Challenges for Emerging Markets under shifting international dynamics
- Macroeconomic dimensions of economic security
- Fiscal imbalances and global inflation

Both theoretical and empirical papers are suited, and applications using euro area data are particularly welcome.

The deadline for submissions is Sunday, July 20th. Papers or extended abstracts can be submitted to the following email address: pw@eui.eu

Authors of successful submissions will be notified by Thursday, July 31st. Travel reimbursements in economy class will be available to participants from academic institutions (up to 450 Euros). Accommodation in Paris will also be available to such participants for up to 2 nights.

The event is hosted by the Banque de France, and co-sponsored by the Pierre Werner Chair at the EUI and the Banque de France.
